Two Classes of War Issues Now Being Separated - Banks Use Moral Suasion.

Watching Crucible was the work of most of those who came down to Wall Street yesterday. The tip was wide-spread that the stock would go to par before the end of the day, and no one was so lacking in friends that he did not have some one to tell him of it. With the rest of the market pursuing an erratic course and presenting many arratic course and presenting many evidences of unsettlement there was evidence of unsettlement there was evidenced the day after Becker's execution, was held in the Jefferson Market court yesterday in $2,000 bail to await action of the grand jury.

After asserting that he had police protection, Luban admitted yesterday that the statement was not true. His place ran openly until a newspaper disclosed what went on inside of the rooms. Here is a sample: Recently one of the Allies wanted some locomotives and the placing of the order was left to Great Britain. The bid of an English locomotive company was lower than that of an American company, which had been invited to make a proposal, and so the English company got the order. Now, outside of a regular munitions works no kind of a company has a casting plant better fitted to make shells such as Great Britain so desperately needs than a locomotive company. And yet, in the face of so great a need for shells, that country puts aside a splendid opportunity for adding to its shell-production by turning the energies of an available plant into the making of locomotives!

As to Discrimination.

There was a report current yester-day that the heaviness of one of the war issues, which a few weeks ago rose like a incipient Bethlehem Steel, was due to something more than mere profittaking. It was said that a clique generally ask in collateral loans. And in still other instances misapprehen-sions had arisen because the banks had sions had arisen because the banks had refused to accept the borrowers' valation of stocks deposited as collateral. The banks are not pretending that they know he real value of the stocks, but they are simply protecting themselves against the wide fluctuations that have occurred in a number of the war issues.

THE WOOL MARKET.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.] Philadelphia. Aug. 6.—No important change has taken place in the local wool market during the past week. Demand has not been urgent, but at the same time manufacturers in need of supplies have taken a fair quantity of stock and prices have been firmly maintained. Holders of medium unwashed fleecees are generally asking more money than huyers are disposed to pay, claiming that they cannot lay down fresh supplies from producing points for profitable resale on a basis of ruling prices.

GENERAL MARKET REPORT. New York, August 6, 1915.

Offerings of wheat to arrive increased so noticeably from the country that traders in general were looking for big receipts by Monday, unless bad weather should again interfere. This fact, with reports from all directions that the long delayed thrashing was again under way, led to a rush of selling as soon as the market was open. In addition, dispatches were at head belittling the damage in the hand belittling the damage in the spring wheat states and asserting that the crop there was swiftly maturing ahead of the rust. Word that large export orders for wheat were in the market very close to working limits brought about several good rallies, but each time greater weakness ensued. The highest esti-mate of sales to Europe was 750,000 bushels. It was said business with foreigners was checked by the high premiums asked and by the lack of supplies.

South. The actions of yesterday's cotton market conveyed the impression to many that an advance of $3 per bale from the low point of last week was sufficient inducement to holders to cause a generous selling movement. That such pressure failed to seriously disturb the level of prices was due largely to a continuation of Liverpool buying on a scale perhaps greater than buying on a scale perhaps greater than at any time this week. In the first hour purchases on this account were estimated at about 15,000 bales of Oc-tober and 35,000 bales of January. At accounted for the initial advances of sto 9 points here. Following this the local market sold 10 to 12 points over the previous night, which proved to be high levels of the day as realizing developed on a considerable scale. October sold off fr m 9.53c to 9.42c, and the close was about lowest, or 1 point net lower to 6 higher, being greaterally 1 to 2 lover on the active generally 1 to 2 lover on the active positions. Some of the midday and afternoon selling was influenced by a renewal of rumors that cotton was about to be placed on the contraband about to be placed on the contraband list, and by private reports, later confirmed, of a hard rain at Waco, Texas, in the centre of the state. This was not indicated on the detailed report from the Houston district, which showed light rains at only a few points in Texas. Among the early sellers were Wall Street houses and houses with Southern connections. An increasing hedge pressure is expected.

SALE OF PINKNEY HOLDINGS ORDERED

Property Was Owned by Spinster Who Died in 1908, 99 Years Old.

VALUE OF PARCELS

She Had a Summer Country Villa on Manhattan

The entire holdings in Harlem of the late Mary G. Pinkney are to be sold. This sale has been ordered by Clarence H. Kelsey, prosident of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, who was recently appointed administrator of the estate in place of the late Charles E. Littlefield. He has appointed the J. Romaine Brown Company and Jacob Leitner as his agents for the sale and management of the holdings of the estate.

NORTHWARD DRIFT OF PRINTING TRADE

Mary Goodwin Pinkney died in De-cember, 1908, at the age of ninety-nine, leaving the Watt property, which she had inherited, to her nephews and nieces. At the time of her death the property was appraised at $8,000,000. Since then a large number of the estate properties have been sold. It is said, however, that the remaining unsold sites are valued at about $5,000,000.

however, that the remaining unsold as sites are valued at about $5,000,000.

She had the distinction of being the only woman spinster to have a summer country villa on Manhattan. It was the old Watt mansion, situated in the square block bounded by 139th and 140th sts., Lenox and Seventh avs. She moved there each summer from the Buckingham Hotel, where she lived the other seasons. She was a stepdaughter of the late Commodore Archibald Watt. It was in 1826 that Commodore Watt bought a farm extending from 132d st. and Seventh av. northwest to Edgecombe av. at 135th st. and north and east to the Harlem River. He bought outlying pieces on Washington Heights and near Macomb's Dam Bridge and made several purchases on the West Side downtown. He started digging a canal on his own account along the bed of old Harlem Creek, at 108th st. and East River, intending to carry it across to the Hudson. $1,500,000, but Miss Pinkney, who was very saving in other ways, continued to live there on account of its associations. She had cabbage, lettuce and other farm truck grown on its grounds for her table, although the value of the land used for vegetable garden brought the cost of the lettuce and cabbage up to several dollars a head, it is said. A part of that garden is among the properties yet to be sold.
